MY CAREER SO FAR

We asked five former students to tell us about their world of work.
Here's what they had to say...

- A. Since I was at primary school I've known I wanted to make jewellery. You get a real sense of satisfaction out of jewellery-making because you work on something from the start to the finish, and at the end can see what you've done. I work together with eight to ten other people at a company which specializes in silver jewellery and I'm the foreman, which I enjoy. It also helps if you have an interest outside of work, like collecting antique pieces, because then your job becomes a part of what you like doing anyway
- B. I was brought up on a farm and that's basically how I got into being a pig farmer. I worked on a pig farm for a couple of years in Derbyshire in England. I then moved to New Zealand, and I had a job on a farm there for a couple of years. I've been at this farm since I came back. I like the fact that you're doing something different every day and it's very rewarding. I also think it's important for me to keep learning and that's why I completed a National Diploma in Agri-Business Management last year. Farming is a competitive business and you need to stay ahead.
- C. I've been working as a television journalist for six months now and I love it. I studied Spanish and Maths at university and then worked as a translator in Spain. After eight years or so, I decided to do something new and came home. Journalism seemed really interesting, so I worked for a range of newspapers and magazines, and eventually got a job as a television reporter. A lot of my time is spent in the car, travelling up and down the country to get stories. We have to go back to the office though to work on putting the story together. We look at the camera footage and write a script to go with it. There's a lot of time pressure involved in this job and sometimes we can still be editing a story one or two minutes before it is actually shown on television.
- D. I'm an outdoor recreation guide, and I guess that's partly because I grew up in the mountain and had an upbringing that included lots of rock climbing. While I was doing my degree in tourism and management at university, I also organized outdoor recreation courses for a local youth group. I enjoy teaching teenagers, and I'm now a qualified instructor in canoeing, rock climbing, and ice climbing. I also teach avalanche awareness, and run mountain safety courses at school. Instructing is about giving people the skills to go out and achieve something by themselves. It's great when you witness them doing something they never thought they were capable of.
- E. I'm a winemaker and really enjoy working in rural Britain. When I was at school, I worked in a winery during the holidays, and then after I left, I spent a month with a local winemaker. It was my time with him that made me decide to pursue winemaking as a career. I had to go to France to study winemaking because in those days there weren't any courses available in Britain. But it was an interesting time, and I met lots of people from different wine-making countries like the USA and Australia. When I graduated, I came back to the UK to this winery, and I've been working here ever since. The good things about this job is the fact that you can work practically anywhere in the world - lots of countries produce wine now.
